THE WORLD'S PAGEANT

The King's Apartments

KING GEORGE, it has now been arranged, will not, when the Court is removed to Buckingham Palace, occupy the suite of apartments used by the late King. These were in the north front, and had a delightfully "country" view over the gardens that slope right down to Grosvenor Place. The King has chosen instead those rooms in the east front looking down the Mall which were used by Queen Victoria, and it is expected that the apartments at present reserved for Princess Victoria will be prepared for the Queen. It is to be hoped, by the way, that the idea of facing the Palace with stone as a memorial to King Edward will meet with the support it deserves. The grimy stucco front which the Royal residence now presents to the world was, I believe, among the last touches given to the Palace when Queen Victoria came to the Throne. George IV., of course, built it, though neither he nor William IV. ever lived in it.

Royal Birthdays

The King's birthday, not his real birthday or his foreign stations birthday, but just his official and home stations birthday, is to be celebrated on Friday, and to-morrow also the Duke of Cornwall, known at home as "David," attains the sixteenth anniversary of his birth. His Royal Highness's confirmation, and that of his brother, Prince Albert, is also to take place this week at Windsor, the Archbishop of Canterbury and Mr. Edgar Sheppard, religious tutor to the Royal children, officiating. The Heir-Apparent does not officially come of age for another two years, so it has not yet been deemed necessary to discuss the question of his future residence. But it is understood to be the Queen's wish that York Cottage, Sandringham, should be reserved for His Royal Highness. It is also announced that the revenues of the Duchy of Cornwall (some £80,000 a year) will, without further provision, suffice for the Duke's present needs.

The Regency

The passing of the Bill whereby Queen Mary shall be Regent and Guardian of any infant Sovereign who may succeed King George is a reminder that Her Majesty has now for the first time full control over the education of the Heir-Apparent. While King Edward was alive all suggestions as to the young Prince's career had to be first submitted to him, the Constitution reserving to the Sovereign the right to control the education of a probable heir to the throne. As at present arranged the cruise which the Duke of Cornwall and his brother will make round the world will commence about the middle of next year, and will last until the Heir-Apparent officially comes of age.

Earl Beauchamp

Who has been appointed Lord President of the Council in place of Viscount Wolverhampton, resigned. He has been Lord Steward of the Household since 1907. Eight years ago he married Lady Lettice Grosvenor, who has since become a well-known and popular hostess

The Queen's Ladies

All the Queen's ladies practise without exception an almost extreme simplicity of attire, and are, like their Royal mistress, not in the least blind followers of the goddess Fashion. The new Mistress of the Robes (who, by the way, has, of course, nothing to do with the Queen's wardrobes), the Duchess of Devonshire, lives almost entirely in the country, entertains very seldom, and dresses accordingly. Lady Shaftesbury, whose husband is to be the Queen's Chamberlain, wears very simple and youthful, though not "little girlish," clothes, and none of the other ladies honoured by the Queen's friendship—Lady Ebury, Lady Beauchamp, Lady Bradford, Mrs. Derek Keppel, Lady Bertha Dawkins, and Lady Mary Trefusis—give a moment more time and thought than they can possibly help to the subject of dress.

Ascot—a Revelation

"Black Ascot," to quote all the papers, has a doleful, reproachful ring about it, and those with little imagination have endeavoured to poison the public mind into representing the affair as a mournful one. As a general spectacle, seen from the coaches, or way down among the straw hats in the further stands, Black Ascot was gloomy—obviously! But a journalist of imagination should surely have realised that a black crowd requires individual and not collective consideration, and his duty was clearly to let good manners go and just stare. From that point of view Black Ascot was a revelation, a dispensation. It was the Englishwoman's charter of emancipation from the belief that her beauty owes aught to clothes. The eye, having little sartorial to occupy it, fell upon faces, to discover, to its delighted astonishment, that we can put together decidedly more pretty women to one rood than most other countries can to a square mile. When, however, one did look down at their clothes, one realised how exceedingly pretty and tasteful black can be made to look, if used properly, and not too, too conscientiously. So long as the outer material is black, it matters not how gossamer-like its transparency—and that is the whole point about it. And how very boldly becoming a black hat can look! One confrère was so indignant at the strictness of the mourning orders in the Enclosure that one is inclined to suspect that he himself was unaffected by them. And, he might have remembered, it is not poor Viscount Churchill who is responsible for such things at all, but the laws of the Medes and Persians which change not.

The Ascot Hosts

Much hospitality was dispensed at Ascot, and the Committees of the Marlborough, Bachelors', and Cavalry Clubs are all to be congratulated on the excellence of their arrangements. The Marlborough Club tent was erected at the far end of the Paddock, and was crowded all day long. The menu was an excellent one, and the pigeon pie and cold curry was voted fit for a king.

The Beauties?

Who were voted to be the beauties of the meeting? Well, for my part, I should say, Lady Newborough and her sister, Mrs. Chauncey, Mrs. Harry Greer, Mrs. Hall Walker, Lady Joan Byng, Mrs. Arthur Crichton, Lady Milbanke, Mrs. George Holdsworth, Lady Mary Bowes Lyons, Miss Leila White, Lady Evelyn Guinness, Miss Glover, Lady Evelyn Ward—and, of course, the others!

Cup Day

Cup Day at Ascot was the most successful of the meeting, and the crowd was very large indeed. Many fresh faces were to be seen in the Enclosure, including the Duchess of Roxburghe, Lady Zetland, Lady Katherine Somerset, Lady Yarborough, Lady Crewe, who was to be seen walking about the Paddock with her father, Lord Rosebery, and Mr. Neil Primrose. Mrs. Winston Churchill wore garments more wonderful than beautiful, and Lady Evelyn Guinness's gown was generally voted novel in the extreme.

Taste in Opera

The opera has been well attended during the past week, and some good performances have taken place. Madame Melba scored as Desdemona in Otello one night, and Madame Destinn was superb as La Tosca. A tremendous success was scored again by Mme. Kirkby Lunn as Dalila, a part which she seems to have made her very own. But what exquisite music it is — and have all those who call Dalila's famous aria hackneyed heard it as it is sung in the opera? The enchantress's caressing love-song to the man she is about to destroy is one of the great things in music, let the cavillers say what they will. And the ballet in the Temple scene at the end is another of them.

The Greatest Thoroughbred in Training

Mr. Fairie's Bayardo (Maher up) being led in by his owner, after his magnificent victory in the race for the Ascot Gold Cup

A Duke for Canada

The rumour persists that the Duke of Connaught is to go to Canada, and one thing at any rate is certain—Canada would be pleased. Next to the Americans no people love better a real live lord. A real live Royal Duke would be better still, of course. The Duke of Connaught is eminently suited to a post in which charming manners, much tact, and a handsome appearance are the essentials; and he has a pretty daughter, for whom a certain amount of entertaining would be a sine quâ non, as well as a son tried and trained in the duties of A.D.C.-ship. This said, however, I am personally among the cavillers who, on grounds of policy, think it a bad precedent to appoint a Royal Duke to a civil Governorship, in which he must, of necessity, become more or less "dragged in" to the controversies of the people he governs. Secondly, why, Australia, South Africa, India, and New Zealand may well ask, should Canada alone have a Royal Governor? The position of the mere nobleman or shelved politician who is, in future, sent to govern those dominions will be weakened, and trouble, more trouble, will ensue for the poor old Empire.

Next Week

Our next issue will be our annual "Society and Sports" number. It will contain some very beautiful colour-plates, including one by Mr. E. F. Sherie, entitled "The Airmaid," which is likely to attract considerable attention. The issue will be enlarged to one hundred pages.

The Charm of the Woman in Black

AS REVEALED AT ASCOT

Lady Newborough

The Countess of Portarlington and Mr. Lowther

Lady Sybil Grant

Earl of Derby with Lady Wolverton

Much has been said of the Black Ascot. The obvious fact, however, that the peculiar beauty of the Englishwoman, particularly the blonde, is never seen to better advantage than in mourning has not been generally admitted. Certainly, rarely or never have the well-known beauties of London Society, some of whom are photographed above, been better appreciated than by their admirers of 1910. Foreign visitors are said to have been particularly impressed on this occasion, and there is already talk of une mode noire in Paris

The Queen-Mother

The Queen-Mother will, I learn, continue to reside for the present at Buckingham Palace, King George and Queen Mary having very chivalrously respected the widowed Queen's wishes in that matter. The difficulty as to the flying of the Royal Standard, which, of course, residence there of the Queen-Mother alone does not permit, is, I understand, to be got over by the design of a special flag, in which Danish Royal emblems will be included.

Earl Carrington, Duchess of Beaufort, and Lady Edith Villiers at the Richmond Horse Show

The Richmond Horse Show lost nothing by following the brilliant affair at Olympia. The attendances were splendid, the sunshine quite un-English, and the exhibits such as to cause the patriotic bosom to swell

Funeral Echoes

Parliament revealed a little of its chagrin at its treatment by the authorities in the Funeral ceremonies, but has, it appears, accepted the situation with good grace, and decided to allow bygones to be bygones. But of other faux pas in connection with the same ceremony we have not yet heard the last. For one thing, M. Pichon, the French delegate, was annoyed at being called on to share his carriage not alone with Mr. Roosevelt, as might have been seemly as uniting the two great Republics, but with his Excellency from Persia. Without any intention to belittle that ancient Empire, the French Minister thought that France, the dear friend and ally, might and should have been allowed to share carriages at least with a diplomatic equal. That the somewhat acid tone of certain "inspired" articles in the French Press was an echo of the slight to M. Pichon is not to be believed. The French Government has quite enough to be annoyed about without recourse to trifles.

The Foreign Secretary's Troubles

The Sphinx of Downing Street, Sir Edward Grey—some call him the Sphinx without a secret—is not having quite the time of his life just at present. Deprived of the gracious assistance of King Edward, he has now to depend more on his own graciousness than has been the case since he took office, and that is not, from the foreigner's point of view, a very large quantity. Sir Edward Grey, in himself a solid enough man, has been much more dependent on outside aid than has generally been suspected, and the death of King Edward, plus the removal to India of Sir Charles Hardinge, arouses keen speculation as to how he will get on in the future. His speech on Crete cleared the air finely, and seems to have put us right with the Turks, who have not had much reason to love us of late. The suggestion that Royal family influence was leading us to the fatal course of supporting pan-Hellenic pretensions has been dissipated, and none too soon. That Queen Alexandra had exerted influence in favour of her brother of Greece, whose throne would be menaced by a Cretan failure, was only natural, but the general opinion is that the real influence has been that of the Empress Marie. It was feared that Her Majesty might be known as the "power behind the throne" elsewhere than in Russia. However, the danger was but short-lived, and Sir Edward Grey has, in this matter, if in few others, proved himself to be capable of real boldness.

The Sphinx Without a Secret

So far as Egypt is concerned, there are many who think that the Sphinx has buried his reputation in that appropriate region. His admission that he was "behind" the Roosevelt Guildhall harangue has almost irretrievably damaged his reputation with his own party and Press—and others, too. Heaven knows, THE BYSTANDER is no friend of disorder in Egypt or anywhere else, but I do regard it as a scandal that it should be out of the mouth of a travelling American politician, and not from that of a responsible Minister, that should have come those words of warning. On the day when Grey agreed to let Roosevelt make that speech British dignity was cast to the four winds, and a deadly precedent was established. For what is to prevent any other notoriety-seeking Yankee, in need of a new boom, stepping over here and telling Europe its business? Our Ministers are surely too readily deceived by the insinuating advertiser from abroad. If I may offer a word of suggestion to fellow Tories—keep your eye on Grey, and remember that now there is but one Edward, where formerly there were two.

A Truly Rural Prospect

THE NEW PASSION FOR AL FRESCO CONFERENCES

(It is feared that other celebrities will follow the example of Sir Edward Grey and Mr. Roosevelt in taking country walks together.)

Lord Kitchener has had a good deal of time on his hands of late, and has spent much of it strolling about Epping Forest with Lord Curzon, discussing the future of India, about which, it is believed, Lord Curzon is pessimistic. Passing our rural correspondent yesterday afternoon, Lord Kitchener was heard to exclaim, "Mediterranean! Bah!"

It is not generally known that Johnson and Jeffries are old friends, and propose to spend a day in the country together before long.

Mr. Asquith and Mr. Lloyd George have taken to the habit of long tramps about the fields, varied by the robbing of hen-roosts and a little poaching. Last Saturday they were seen wandering in the neighbourhood of Harrow hand-in-hand, looking disheartened and listless.

On the new "Conciliation" principle various enjoyable camping-out parties have been arranged. Dr. Clifford and the editor of the Tablet have taken a hedge in Mid-Surrey for a week with a view to considering whether their main points of difference cannot be adjusted, and Lord Lansdowne and Mr. Victor Grayson have been sharing a tent up the river. An experiment was made with a mixed caravan tour by a body of Labour Members and a deputation of the Lords and the extreme section of the Conservative party, but after the first night the enterprise was broken up, principally owing to a fundamental difference on the subject of washing.

It was unfortunate that the annual treat given by Mr. Asquith to the Cabinet on Hampstead Heath coincided in time and place with the monster Suffragette beanfeast. After an attempt at mixed rounders, an altercation took place, and the merrymakers were broken up by a charge of the mounted police, 230 battered umbrellas, 47 toques (slightly soiled), 39 sets of false teeth, and portions of 173 bowler hats were collected by the scavengers, and may be recovered by the owners at Scotland Yard Lost Property Office.

A brilliant Doubles player

IN spite of the fact that for the last six or eight seasons Wimbledon has become more and more each year the lawn tennis battlefield of all nations, the World's Singles Championship has only once been won by a colonial player, and never by a foreigner. The successful colonial was the famous Australian, Norman Brookes, in 1907, and in that same year, he and his Australasian partner, A. F. Wilding (New Zealand), won the Doubles; while in 1905 and 1907, Miss May Sutton (America) carried off the Ladies' Championship. This is the total list of successes achieved by the invaders since the Wimbledon meeting was first instituted; but the chance that it will have to be added to this year is, unfortunately (from our point of view), far from remote. Of the several likely winners whose portraits appear on this page (and there are, of course, others besides), I am inclined, from a close observation of his play during the past fortnight, to plump for Beals Wright, the American, in spite of all that has been said about his inability to play without "steel points" on his shoes. His most dangerous opponents will probably be A. F. Wilding, Froitzheim, the Champion of Germany, and, of our own men, Roper Barrett, Ritchie, and Gore, the present Champion. The Ladies' Championship should, on present form, undoubtedly go to Mrs. Lambert Chambers, but about the Doubles, in which there are several strong and absolutely level pairs, I am not prepared to prophesy. It is a pity that Norman Brookes and Miss Sutton are not with us. Had they been seen in the lists, this year's Championships would have quite eclipsed those of 1906 and 1907.

"GLASS HOUSES" AT THE GLOBE THEATRE

THIS play is reminiscent of the old proverb which teaches us that people who live in glass houses—ought to keep the blinds down. I am sorry to be disappointing, but the fact is that the full details of the scandal are not forthcoming. All that we know is that pretty little Mrs. Goring, very effectively represented by Miss Muriel Beaumont, was seen coming away from Captain O'Brien's cottage near Salisbury early one morning, and seemed from her manner to be very anxious to escape observation. Captain O'Brien is unmarried, and is not in a position to receive unaccompanied ladies at his residence. Therefore, the case admits of no other conclusion. The witnesses of Mrs. Goring's hurried departure from the bachelor quarters were General Carteret and the injured husband, Ralph Goring; and as the lady subsequently confesses her fault, there is a clear case for the lawyers. Goring (a delightfully humorous performance by Mr. George Bealby) is a rather weak-willed young man, and he comes to the General to ask what he ought to do about it. You see, he is still rather fond of his wife, and to err is human, and all that sort of thing; and if she promised never to do it again, why not forgive and forget, and regard the incident as closed, as it were? What?

THE General goes pink in the face at the bare suggestion. There is only one thing to be done. Everybody knows that. Goring must instruct his solicitors to proceed at once with the suit for divorce, and Captain O'Brien must marry the respondent at the earliest possible moment. No other solution of the difficulty is to be even thought of. As it happens, however, Captain O'Brien was not at the cottage that morning at all. He had lent the place to John Carteret, the General's son, who very correctly declines to allow another man to bear the blame of the fault that is his. He takes the first opportunity of calling on his father and accepting the fullest responsibility for his share of the trouble. The General at first declines to believe this new version of the unfortunate incident. He suggests that an unseemly joke is being played at his expense; but when he is convinced that the facts are all there in their right order, he realises that he is faced by the prospect of a very distressing family scandal; and he at once proceeds to bully Goring for having been in such a hurry to go to his solicitors, when by a little display of generosity and the exercise of the blessed virtue of forgiveness, the untoward little accident (that might have happened to anybody) could have been overlooked in the spirit of true charity. In fact, the General's new opinion is so convincingly expressed that Goring decides to adopt it at once, and everybody lives happily ever after. The play is rather slight, but it affords good opportunity for excellent acting, and Mr. Bourchier and Miss Vanbrugh are to be congratulated accordingly.

IRISH PLAYS AT THE COURT THEATRE

TO my regret I have to confess that I know little or nothing of John Bull's other island, and that is, perhaps, a reason why I find a difficulty in appraising the work of men who are evidently Irishmen first and playwrights afterwards. I went the other evening to see the late J. M. Synge's play, Riders to the Sea, which is very reasonably described as a tragedy. Yet it is tragedy that does not stir the emotions to any extent; it seemed to me, doubtless from my ignorance of the Irish character, too mechanical to be real. There was the old mother—old enough to be treated as a tiresome child by her two grown-up daughters—and there was the son going from their island home to a neighbouring fair on the mainland. Five of his brothers had done the same, and, one by one, the sea had swallowed them. The old mother urges the lad to choose another day for his trip, for she has a premonition of disaster. He, however, taking little heed of her appeal, sets off, and is brought back shortly afterwards by two sympathetic neighbours, dead.

HERE is a whole world of tragedy indeed; but somehow it gives no shock, perhaps because of the dramatist's method of treating such a series of awful calamities as if they were a part of the daily lives of the Irish peasantry. Miss Sara Allgood, an actress of great distinction, gives a picture of the aged mother that is beautiful to a degree. It should have been pathetic as well; but I could not find it so, and hence I judge that I am handicapped by my ignorance of the West of Ireland and its sentiment. Perhaps the catastrophe was too obvious. The author had all along hinted that we were about to have our withers wrung, and the dramatic effect of the final scene was spoilt by anticipation. Miss Maire O'Neill and Miss Eileen O'Doherty (the Irish atmosphere is here all right!) as the bereaved sisters, gave us clearly to understand that they would shortly be mourning the newly dead, and though they did it in due course very gracefully, there seemed a lack of reality about their grief. In spite of its artificiality, however, Riders to the Sea, as a pen-picture of the West Coast of Ireland by a man who knew what he was writing about, has a fascination of its own that I found irresistible. It is poetry from first to last, grim, mournful, and dirge-like; but a poetry that is always musical—the portentous music of the rising storm that is summoning all the voices of the wind to chant a warning of the approach of death. But I can see that such a play, to be properly appreciated, must be seen with Irish eyes, and, above all, through the Irish soul.

Sketches at the Court Theatre by Norman Morrow

ANOTHER of the plays that I saw was The Playboy of the Western World, by the author mentioned above. Here, again, however, some intimacy with local sentiment and tradition is necessary before even the title has a clear meaning; while the play itself is absolutely bewildering to the uninstructed Sassenach. Flaherty, who keeps a public-house somewhere in County Mayo, is hesitating about leaving his pretty daughter alone in the bar without a protector while he is away at a wake. Suddenly there arrives on the scene a tramp-like youth, who calls for whisky, and hopes that no one has seen the police about. Pressed as to the reasons for his apprehensions, he explains that a week ago he killed his father with a single blow. The effect of this confession on his auditors is amazing. The prevailing note is one of the frankest admiration. Here, at least, is a man of action! Flaherty engages him on the spot as barman, and tells his friends that he can go away now with every confidence, as he is leaving someone in the house who is clearly qualified to protect his daughter from harm.

THE daughter herself makes no attempt to disguise the sentiments she holds towards a young man of such resource and enterprise. She talks to him sympathetically, gives him food and drink, and makes up a bed for him in the bar; till, impressed by the many attentions that his deed has provoked, he expresses regret, as he lies down to sleep, that he had not thought of killing his father before! It is fair to add that the father himself turns up again alive and indifferently well; and the nice story is continued by the old gentleman's announcement that he is looking for his son in order to kill him. This play is said to have been based on an actual occurrence in the west; but the fine rollicking humour with which it is detailed is, no doubt, the author's own. Miss Maire O'Neill as Flaherty's daughter looked and acted very prettily; and Mr. Fred O'Donovan as the "Playboy" seemed fairly to revel in his strange part, which could not, I am sure, have been better represented. The play is undoubtedly a clever piece of work, but its real significance can be apparent only to the elect.

THE LOOK OF THINGS

FROM A BYSTANDER'S POINT OF VIEW

A ROUND-TABLE Conference, whatever its final value, is a great boon to newspaper-readers. In the ordinary way there is such a sameness about political reports, but when there is a Round-Table Conference, all the papers give a different account of it.

THIS is, perhaps, because no reporters are admitted to it. You cannot expect men of such varied talents and opinions all to guess the same thing.

GOING to press before a solution of the Constitutional difficulty has been arrived at, I can only state that, for a few more weeks anyway, we are likely to retain our House of Lords. American visitors should seize the earliest opportunity to visit this quaint old Chamber.

* * *

MR. ROOSEVELT went off without telling us what to do with it. Stay, though. It may be he sent Kermit round privately to King George to suggest the conciliation business.

IT is a dramatic idea, and I offer it for what it is worth—provided the Observer has not already copyrighted it, along with all other dramatic ideas.

"BOTH Indian and Egyptian Nationalist politicians require"—says a contemporary—"to go through a hardening process." The Indians will have to put up with a Hardinging one.

LORD CHEYLESMORE has emphasised the fact that the Army Pageant is not "a Jingo affair." All the same, if the sight of the ancient Britons armed with their clubs and "thumping stones" gives the Germans to think, so much the better.

THERE is a curious story, by the way, going about that the German Army successfully invaded the Island of Sylt, in the North Sea, a few days ago, despite the island being guarded by thousands of troops. Perhaps having had such a triumphant time in Sylt the German Army will leave our own rather larger island alone?

RUSSIA has decided to do away with the Finnish Constitution. This is all very well now, but when a Finnish Mr. O'Brien consumes the time of the Duma some years hence by giving his personal opinions of a Finnish Mr. Redmond, Russia will be sorry she didn't leave Finland alone.

* * *

MR. ROOSEVELT, it is said, will be asked shortly to lead a new party in the States. Qualifications for membership are not to hand, but persumably they will include:

1. A family of not less than fifteen.
2. A love of listening to platitudes.
3. A habit of not thinking they are platitudes.
4. A certificate for shooting a white rhinoceros.

A party formed on these lines should sweep all before it, and have time in between to help stuff Mr. Roosevelt's trophies.

IT seems almost like a coincidence that, directly before Mr. Roosevelt's departure from Europe, an enterprising company set to work to boom its "Domes of Silence."

A GOOD deal was made last week of a story of a Parisienne who wore so large a hat that though walking on the pavement she was caught by the spike of a cart in the road, and lost both her hat and her false hair. But there is really nothing in it, unless the idea is that men should carry spikes to matinées

ALREADY American hostesses are planning to get the Duke of Connaught over from Canada to visit them in New York. Perhaps it would be as well—though it seems premature—to remind them that the Duke is a most punctilious gentleman, and that any clippings from his wardrobe—though taken by the most enthusiastic souvenir-hunters—would be resented.

The Cretan Question; England's Happy-go-Lucky Attitude; The Popular Belgian Queen

Our Unlucky Government

We have an extraordinary knack in foreign affairs just now of giving offence to the very people it is to the British interest to propitiate. Private citizens go out of their way, at considerable expense to themselves, to repair the evil when done and to avert it when threatened, but the Government, with an unlucky touch, is constantly doing the wrong thing, and instead of making friends for England, or even keeping those we have, is rapidly surrounding this country with a widespread unfriendly feeling. The Cretan question, though the British public pays relatively little attention to it, is the danger-spot in the world's politics at the present moment, and it will be used more or less unscrupulously by all the diplomatic missions at Constantinople. Anyone who has been among them in the flesh will understand.

Happy-go-Lucky England

At Pera they are all huddled together, all watching each other, almost spying upon each other. If any Ambassador pays a visit to another, it is at once the subject of riotous speculation among the rest. The journalists haunt the Embassies for news, and on very slight materials sensational matter is flashed across the world. As a fact, hardly anything really important is ever done by the Embassies on the spot, and their energies are so much absorbed in this espionage and counter-espionage that the really important things which are happening generally escape the notice of the Embassies altogether. Our own Foreign Office, having an highly developed esprit de corps, shuts its ears absolutely to outside information which other Foreign Offices are only too glad to receive from competent sources. On the Cretan question and its relations to the Eastern Mediterranean we are jogging along in a happy-go-lucky mood, quite unconscious of the nearness of a smouldering volcano, which may burst forth at any moment and plunge Europe into untold trouble, to say the least.

The Neo-Greek

To understand the difficulty we must bear in mind that the wealth of the Levant of Constantinople, Salonica, etc., is in the hands of the Greeks, and that the power is in the hands of the traditional enemies of the Greeks—the Turks. We must remember that the creation of a Greek State was the beginning of the realisation of the Greek dream of a reunited Hellenic Empire restored to its old headquarters, Bizantium — the Stamboul of to-day — where the foundations of a magnificent city lie buried under the wooden tenements which the nomad Turks ran up after the destruction of the then centre of Greek culture. Beneath the surface are still used the magnificent reservoirs, with thousands of graceful columns supporting the superstructure. The neo-Greek may be a poor representative of Bizantine artistic genius, but he can read the books of ancient Gree e in the original, and his patriotic fire is kindled at the thought that he is doing the work of trade and industry which keeps a State going in which he feels himself an alien and is treated as one, though the soil he inhabits was that of his proud ancestors.

A Pilot Wanted

Crete has long been, in the eyes of Greek patriots, the next step in the process of reconstructing this Greek Empire, and if the old régime had remained, Greek money would have solved the remaining difficulties. The Young Turks have brought a new element upon the scene. They are as patriotic as the Greeks. To keep what remains of Turkey together means to the Young Turk keeping the European part of Turkey. He considers himself a European, and further dismemberment is, in his eyes, a diminution of status. A certain amount of clever engineering will be needed to steer safely between these ultra-patriotic rocks. Unfortunately, the diplomatists are not so much trying to solve the difficulty in the interests of the party as trying to obtain some diplomatic advantage, which will be admired at Pera, for their own Embassies. As usual, the French Foreign Office, which is the best-informed one in Europe, will probably find a solution, and it is rumoured that that solution, if adroitly put forward with a proper consideration for Turkish feeling, will be on the same lines as the Bosnia-Herzegovina settlement.

Brussels Brighter

With a Queen of their own — and a Queen so beloved—Brussels takes a new lease of social life. Up till recently, Court functions have been stiff and uninteresting. The late King, who disliked pomp and ceremony, presided at the Courts as he might have done at a Company meeting, crowding in as much work as he could in as short a time as possible. The new Queen, like the King, kept discreetly in the background, fearing to offend her cousins or the late King by taking too active a social rôle. The people of Brussels love gaiety, and the new régime is anything but dull.

Legal Humours

IT is very difficult for an Englishman to realise a French Court of Law. Proceedings are so very different in French Courts from proceedings in our Courts of Law at home. We have all heard a judge sternly rebuke a little outburst of laughter in an English Court. "This is not a theatre" is the usual formula he uses. But a French Court is as amusing as and affords more varied amusement than most theatres. A few weeks ago Madame Liane de Pougy was the principal witness in a trial for assault at Saint Germain. The trial was one huge joke from the start to the finish, and Madame Liane de Pougy's evidence created one long uproar of amusement. Liane de Pougy is as well known in Paris as the Place Vendôme. Her description of herself as "a woman of letters" was received with a chuckle, which degenerated into loud laughter as she found it necessary to use expressions culled from natural history to describe what the other ladies in the case had called her and Prince Ghika, her companion, whom, by the way, she has since married. The case was all about a hat. The hat was produced in Court, and the trial ended in a perfect firework display of phrases with a double meaning and of compliments.

Was the Judge Asleep?

But it is in the more sensational French trials that we see the strangest things. I remember two of them which struck me most forcibly during the Steinheil case. The first was during the evidence of Monsieur Marcel Hutin. All of a sudden the witness, who is a well-known journalist on the Echo de Paris, and who prides himself as much on his elegance of manner as upon his elegant style, got into an argument with the prisoner. He turned away from the judge, and with his back to the jury. And there they stood—the prisoner, accused of murder, in the dock, the witness in the little stand in the centre of the Court which does duty for the witness-box—indulging in a polite argument as to what had or had not been said on a former occasion, oblivious of judge, jury, and Court. Madame Steinheil might have been in a box at the Français and Monsieur Hutin chatting with her from the stalls, so charmingly was the Society manner brought—why not?—over the footlights. The conversation was carried on in an undertone, nobody seemed to think that they had any right to interrupt it, and the jury cannot possibly have heard half of it.

The Prisoner's Autograph

Later in the trial, while we waited for the jury's verdict, there was a rush to the room to which Madame Steinheil had retired. It might have been her own drawing-room. She held a regular levée there, and I felt some surprise that the Municipal Guards did not hand ices round. Nobody barred the door; all were free to go and talk to the prisoner and to shake hands with her, and had she wished to take her life she could have done so half a dozen times. As it was, she spent the interval signing her autograph on cards for all who cared to ask for it. Imagine, if you can, such a thing being possible during an English murder trial. I am not sure that the most curious difference between the French Law Courts and our own, though, is not in the attitude assumed by and to the lawyers. The English lawyer pleads impersonally. Nobody would ever think the worse of an English barrister because he had defended the biggest scoundrel living. It is not so with our neighbours. A French lawyer makes his client's case a personal matter, and those who believe Dreyfus to have been guilty, for instance, will always talk and think of that great lawyer, Maître Labori, as though he were a traitor to his country.

À bas les Gendarmes

And the French witness revels in a latitude which an English Court of Law would never permit. During the Hervé trial, which resulted in Hervé's sentence to four years' imprisonment for having written articles praising a man for the murder of a policeman who was trying to arrest him, Hervé called witnesses to "prove the blackguardism of the police." One of them got rather excited when the judge asked him to moderate his language. "I have sworn to tell the truth," he said. "You won't prevent me from declaring that these creatures (the police) disgust me." The judge ordered the Guards to turn the witness out of Court. He didn't really mean it, and nobody moved. "You are afraid of the truth," the witness went on. "Policemen are not men, but wild beasts. They are creatures of colossal stature and with bestial faces." "I'll have you turned out if you say another word," said the judge. "Well, if you want me to use prettier language I will say that there is no intelligence, no gentleness in a policeman's face. They are men with huge and hairy fists, with stomachs full of alcohol. They are there to be brutes, and brutes they are." When one remembers that this witness was asked to give evidence, an Englishman may be forgiven some surprise.

A few days ago, Cavalier Stucky, one of the most popular and influential men in Venice, was murdered by a discharged workman. Every shop in the beautiful city was closed on the day of the funeral. The body was conveyed in a splendid funeral barge, ornamented with rich gilded carvings. With its seventeenth-century decorations and the oarsmen in their old-time costumes, it was an impressive cortège. BLACK AND GREEN AND GOLD

MOURNING GARMENTS AND A JUNE SUN ON ASCOT HEATH

A General View of the Stands

The Start for the Coventry Stakes (First Day)

THE first Georgian Ascot since 1830 was a study in black and green and gold. On the funereal congregation of men and women in unrelieved mourning streamed the rays of a golden sun such as does occasionally favour England, even in 1910. Ascot was as lovely as the glorious heath can be in bright June weather, and the sharp contrast between the loveliness of Nature and the ugliness of man and all his works was never more apparent. The black procession that made its way to the paddock between races douched the enthusiasm of any Mark Tapley that might have been present. It was impossible to be anything but gloomy in face of such an overwhelming reminder of the nation's loss. Even the steel-throated gentlemen who lean over the rails were affected, and shouted the odds forte instead of fortissimo.

The racing, on the other hand, was most inspiring. All the finest thoroughbreds in England were on show. On the first day Greenback (second in the Derby) and Charles O'Malley (third in the Derby) won races, greatly to the delight of backers. Also such famous horses as Dean Swift, Rosedrop (winner of the Oaks), Elizabetta (winner of the Chester Cup), and others were seen out. And most pleasing of all to everyone who follows Turf matters, Master Frank Wootton reappeared in the saddle for the first time after his suspension. The brilliant youngster had five mounts. He won one race, was second in three others, and third in the fifth. His second in the Royal Hunt Cup on the second day was most popular, and only eclipsed by the triumph of Bachelor's Double, the hero of the City and Suburban.

Welcome Back! Master Frank Wootton
Who reappeared in the saddle at Ascot for the first time since his suspension

It is pretty safe to prophesy that next year's Ascot will be as white as this year's was black. And we look back on the meeting of 1910 anxiously hopeful that we shall not see its dismal like for many years, and that we shall have the pleasure of cheering the victories of King George's horses at the Royal meetings of the future.

A Little Western Flower

By Basil Macdonald Hastings

Yet marked I where the bolt of Cupid fell,
It fell upon a little Western flower,
Before milk-white, now purple with Love's wound,
And maidens call it Love in Idleness.
Fetch me that flower; the herb I showed thee once.
The juice of it on sleeping eyelids laid
Will make a man or woman madly dote
Upon the next live creature that it sees.
SHAKESPEARE.

TWO little people sat near a sea, water blue and pure as a baby's eyes. The girl was fair and petite, dressed in a dark blue skirt, white golfing jersey, and chocolate-coloured boots. She looked quite a child, but from her lips it was possible to tell that she was at least twenty-one. By her side sat a little man, olive-skinned and little-eyed, obviously a Japanese.

"Why is it all so wonderfully beautiful, Jimmu?"

"Because your eyes are mine, Star-girl."

She slipped her tiny sunburnt hand into his. He kissed it, and his tender eyes gleamed softly.

"Into the waking world we will go, Yvonne, from the asleep sea. The eyes of us will inspire, and very happy shall be the life. You in your God, I in Buddha. And the love of us shall be everlasting."

"Yes, dear Jimmu. We shall be so awfully happy."

"By the ujigami to whom I am dedicate, thy life shall be that of the flower bursting in the sun and shutting in the dark-time. You shall never see the dark-time."

"But the dark is sometimes beautiful, Jimmu."

"Yes, Yvonne, when the world is all hush and you can hear only the rushing of the world's rivers, only the sighing of the world's sleepers, and the flutter of working insects' wings, it is very beautiful. But the sadness is great, and not for you, heart of light."

She moved to his side and laid her warm, pink cheek on his mouth.

Jimmu was a law student. His parents had sent him to London with plenty of money and explicit instructions to master the intricacies of English common law. He had pocketed the money and ignored the instructions. An address in the Temple satisfied Jimmu's wealthy parents, but Jimmu never opened a book. He preferred the book of London life, and turned its pages with hedonistic lethargy. He made to-day delightful, and always regarded to-morrow as the apotheosis of yesterday. He had a good appetite.

Yvonne was the daughter of a vain, pretty, shallow woman, who, in a phase of excessive resignation, had married one, Allan, a chartered accountant, and whose subsequent ambition had been confined to attempting the discovery of a military co-respondent. The chartered accountant had been financially successful, like most maudlin people, with the result that the Allans, with the assistance of three vans from the Army and Navy Stores, moved from Streatham to Queen Anne's Gate, and their maid, Annie, became known, greatly to her disgust, as "Parker." Yvonne, herself, drank Advocaat.

Into the pulsing gaiety of the Queen Anne's Gate drawing-room, one day, penetrated Jimmu, introduced by the young Oxonian (Dulwich and Worcester) who shared his chambers in the Temple.

Jimmu, in the first place, fell in love with the belt that Yvonne wore. As a rule, men, unconsciously, abhor belts. Their embrace of the desired is so irritatingly exhaustive. But Jimmu, being Japanese, was alien to the crude prejudices of the West. The Japanese lover caresses his love with his imagination. To touch the hem of her kimono—Alpha! To nose her nose—Omega!

To return to the belt. It was a blue belt, as blue as the sky on a May morning in an Academy picture, though less spotty. Jimmu, when introduced to Miss Yvonne Allan for the first time, gazed at her belt. His heart asked at once for what the belt contained. Then he raised his gaze and saw the blue pools of her eyes. They matched, the belt and the eyes.

Japan is a dream of blue. Jimmu felt homesick, and in a few months married Yvonne at a registry office while her father was smoking a fat cigar over a defaulting client's thin hair, and her mother was giggling at a grisly General in Rumpelmayer's.

"Is the sea as lovely in Japan as it is at Torquay, Jimmu dear?"

"Seen with the eyes of love, Yvonne, the sea is at its loveliest always."

They went up from the shore brightly to the two-and-a-half-guinea boarding-house.

Wonderful, indeed, the days that followed. Jimmu had forty-five pounds, wrote home for more, and spent his capital freely. He forgot to mention to his parents that he had married a pink and yellow girl, with corn-flowers for eyes and rosebud finger-nails. He was not sure how they would regard the contract, and it seemed absurd to worry them. Yvonne's parents knew of the wedding. Jimmu had patronisingly wired from the railway station: "To me the supreme flower of thy conservatory, at Paddington Registry Office, noon to-day, ever to be remembered. Profuse gratitude." Mr. and Mrs. Allan had both suffered severe shocks, evidenced by an apoplectic fit and a snubbed Lieutenant-Colonel. They instantly despatched private detectives in pursuit of the pair. That cost rather a large sum per diem, and the sleuth-hounds were naturally in no particular hurry.

Then arrived the inevitable day, when three dreadful things all happen at once to the most deserving. Jimmu had a sovereign left and a bill to pay. He also received from his honourable and sagacious parents a sum of money which barely covered the bill, with a warning that he must considerably reduce his expenditure or return to the home of his ancestors. Moreover, Mr. and Mrs. Allan on that particular morning presented themselves in the gold-foil drawing-room of "Seaview," Torquay.

It was a sad, sordid interview.

Yvonne blubbered unrestrainedly. Mrs. Allan sniffed like a thoroughbred on a strange racecourse. Mr. Allan glowered at Jimmu, very much as the British tourist glowers at the Parisian imitation of Steak and Onions.

"What — are — you?" hollowly demanded the chartered accountant.

Jimmu pursed his poetic mouth, and fixed his dancing eyes on the chipped knob of a distant cornice-pole.

"I am a Japanese gentleman of position, sir. I have no money, but my father has much, and you perhaps more."

"D'ye think I'm going to keep you, you damned Oriental?"

Mr. Allan had meant to get that phrase out from the beginning. To his mind it summed up all the horrors of everything outside Europe — pig-tails, opium, harems, chop-sticks, and jiu-jitsu.

"You will, at least, I expect, advance me money to convey my fair bride to the house of my people. All else they will provide."

"What!" Mr. and Mrs. Allan screamed in unison.

"Do you think you are going to take my daughter to your beastly country, sir?" furiously inquired Jimmu's mother-in-law. "It's preposterous. From what I saw at Shepherd's Bush they all live in huts. You must be mad to think of such a thing."

"And how are you going to get there?" continued Mr. Allan. "Not a single halfpenny do you get out of me. Look here, what do your parents think about this scandalous business?"

"The heart of my parents is my heart. My happiness is theirs. For us there is no sorrow save dishonour."

"It's no good spouting your Omar Khayyam to me, What I——"

"What was that, Edgar?" censoriously interrupted Mrs. Allan in the voice of Hamlet's ghost.

"Oh, nothing, dear. One of these people's heathen poets he's quoting. I'm not to be bluffed that way. Now, in the first place, young man, do you know that you are not married in your own country? You ought to have had a ceremony before the Japanese consul, if I know anything about it."

"Not married, Jimmu! Not married!" It was Yvonne's turn to be indignant now.

"Your father makes a mountain out of a mouse, as you say. The ceremony that he speaks of, Yvonne, can be performed to-day, to-morrow, any day, or the day we sail for Japan, if you like. It does not make us any more married, Yvonne."

"Look here, Mr. Jimmu," interrupted Mrs. Allan, "and I don't know whether that is your surname or Christian name, please don't imagine for one moment that you are going to take my daughter to your odious country. She stays with me, at any rate until we have satisfactory evidence that you can support her."

And that was precisely what had to happen. With a capital of £3, Jimmu had perforce to let the Allans have their way, and a very frightened Yvonne bade him a very wet au revoir that evening at Torquay Railway Station.

Jimmu, left to himself, and feeling rather savage, fiercely devoured his evening meal at the boarding-house. The light of his eyes was temporarily extinguished, but he had a mechanical passion for gorgonzola that his troubles could not utterly quench. As he raised his wine-glass he contemplated hara-kiri, but he drank with unusual ardour. In the twilight he munched chocolate and stared seaward over the grieving breakers.

The following day found Jimmu back at the Temple. In the first place, he wrote to his parents revealing the truth, and then borrowed some money with the consciousness of having earned it. Next day he wrote to Yvonne. His letter was not allowed to reach her.

A day or two later Jimmu called at Queen Anne's Gate, and was at once shown into the cold presence of Mrs. Allan.

"You have called to see my daughter, I suppose, Mr. Jimmu."

"I have called to see my wife."

"She is not in London. We have sent her away. Until you are in a position to maintain her, I think she will find any interview disturbing."

"Did she receive my letter, and, if so, why did she not answer?"

"I cannot discuss my daughter's attitude towards you. You must be aware that you have practised a gross deception." Mrs. Allan rattled her reticule.

"I did not deceive your daughter. She knew my position. She gave up all for love."

"Mr. Jimmu, you threaten to become improper. I must ask you to go. Her future is in your hands, and when you have a sensible proposition to make, I shall be very pleased to hear it."

Jimmu made his way to the nearest Tube Station, feeling considerably smaller than before the interview. Shallow and vain though Mrs. Allan was, she had all the instincts and some of the grand manner of the lioness when it was a question of the defence of her young.

"Jeune Fille Lisant"

A GRACEFUL PAINTING BY H. BÜCHER IN THE PARIS SALON DES BEAUX-ARTS

Months flickered by and Jimmu almost forgot that he was a married man. There was, indeed, nothing to remind him, and a great deal to distract him. His parents continued to send him his usual allowance, but had so far not commented on his letter to them announcing his marriage. This he had fully expected. They would not impetuously decide on the proper course to adopt in so extraordinary a situation.

Yvonne nursed her broken heart on a country farm kept by a man who had married an old servant of the Allans. She grieved over the fact that there were no letters from Jimmu, but she was shrewd enough to know that her mother was keeping them back. Bravely she fed the farmer's chickens, and dreamed at nights of Japanese sunsets, of lilac and plum-blossom, and the poetic love-making of her Jimmu.

To a very large extent Yvonne was in disgrace. There was no real understanding between her mother and herself, and beyond occasional stiff notes she held no communication with her parents.

Meanwhile, Jimmu, sad to relate, was flirting. It was as harmless as Yvonne's chicken feeding, and, after all, very largely the fault of Jimmu's dilatory parents, who had not yet provided the money either for passages to Japan or the establishment of an English villa. Moreover, Jimmu was working, working really hard, and an occasional hour of feminine society is imperative for a man who labours with his brains.

The girl that he took to dinners and to theatres was, very naturally, a sharp contrast with Yvonne. She was dark and tall, a clever woman, who was studying Jimmu's quaint personality all the hours she dawdled away with him. Jimmu had fascinated both women. Yvonne had been content to be fascinated and love. This girl was curious to analyse the basis of the fascination, and had only so far succeeded as to forgive the voracity of his appetite.

On a cold January evening, just as Jimmu had finished dressing for the theatre, there were ushered into his presence his utterly-to-be-respected and beloved parents. Their attire was irredeemably Oriental, and their son's welcome for a moment frigidly European. This was the last thing he had expected, but he reflected that he might have guessed it. His ineffably astute father would naturally desire something more than his rather profligate son's word as to the actuality of the marriage. He was here to see "the Western lily," "the supreme star of the world of white women"—and her marriage certificate.

Neither Jimmu's mamma nor Jimmu's papa spoke English. They had exasperating difficulty in finding the Temple, and had but a poor opinion of the London crowds who had smiled at their clothes. Therefore, they were not at the moment in particularly good humour.

Jimmu telephoned to the affinity of the evening at her club and gave her dinner and theatre the coup de grâce. Then, at once, he insisted on escorting his parents to Queen Anne's Gate. At last he would triumph over the despicable ancestors of his bride. His father was willing to part with red wealth which would dazzle the father Allan and irritate the mother Allan. He and Yvonne were as good as reunited.

Jimmu and his resplendent parents arrived at the Allans just before dinner. In his excitement Jimmu had forgotten the hour. He remembered it when he saw Mr. Allan's dull glare of reproach.

Jimmu introduced his parents, explained that they did not speak English, but that they called with the idea of seeing their daughter-in-law, for whom they hoped to have the profound honour of liberally providing.

"Then tell them, Mr. Jimmu, that my daughter is not in town, and that I cannot very well accept the translation of their remarks by so interested a party as yourself."

Jimmu translated.

His father frowned, spoke to his wife, looked across very disapprovingly at Mr. and Mrs. Allan, and finally produced a tremendous wad of notes.

Jimmu tossed them across to Mr. Allan.

"The dowry of Yvonne," he said.

Mr. Allan looked at but did not touch the bundle. He was furious to think that the "damned Oriental" was now top-dog, and that he no longer had any right to keep his daughter from him.

"Tell your father," he said angrily, "that if he is fool enough to finance you and satisfy my lawyer that he is able to, I will place no obstacle in the way of your wife returning to you—if she wishes it."

Jimmu translated it in a modified form.

The strange company of five sat and stared at each other. All were angry in varying degrees and all hungry. Mr. Allan looked at his watch. Jimmu rose. As he did so there was a sound of wheels outside. A cab stopped at the door.

Instinctively everyone in the room waited to hear the voice of the newcomer in the hall.

Jimmu recognised it first.

"It is Yvonne," he said, his face lighting up.

"Why has she come back?" Mrs. Allan asked her husband with some alarm.

"Bored, I suppose," said Mr. Allan, grumpily.

The door opened, and Yvonne, seemingly a little taller and a little plumper, entered the room. Her face glowed with health as she smiled round delightfully at the little company that had risen to meet her. She kissed her father and mother, then, a little shyly, Jimmu, and held the hands of Jimmu's father and mother.

"I've come back now," she said to Jimmu, "only because I couldn't come before." She blushed and grasped her husband's hand.

A nurse entered the room bearing a long white bundle.

Yvonne laughed lightly and very quietly.

Mrs. Allan came forward, her eyes wide with amazement.

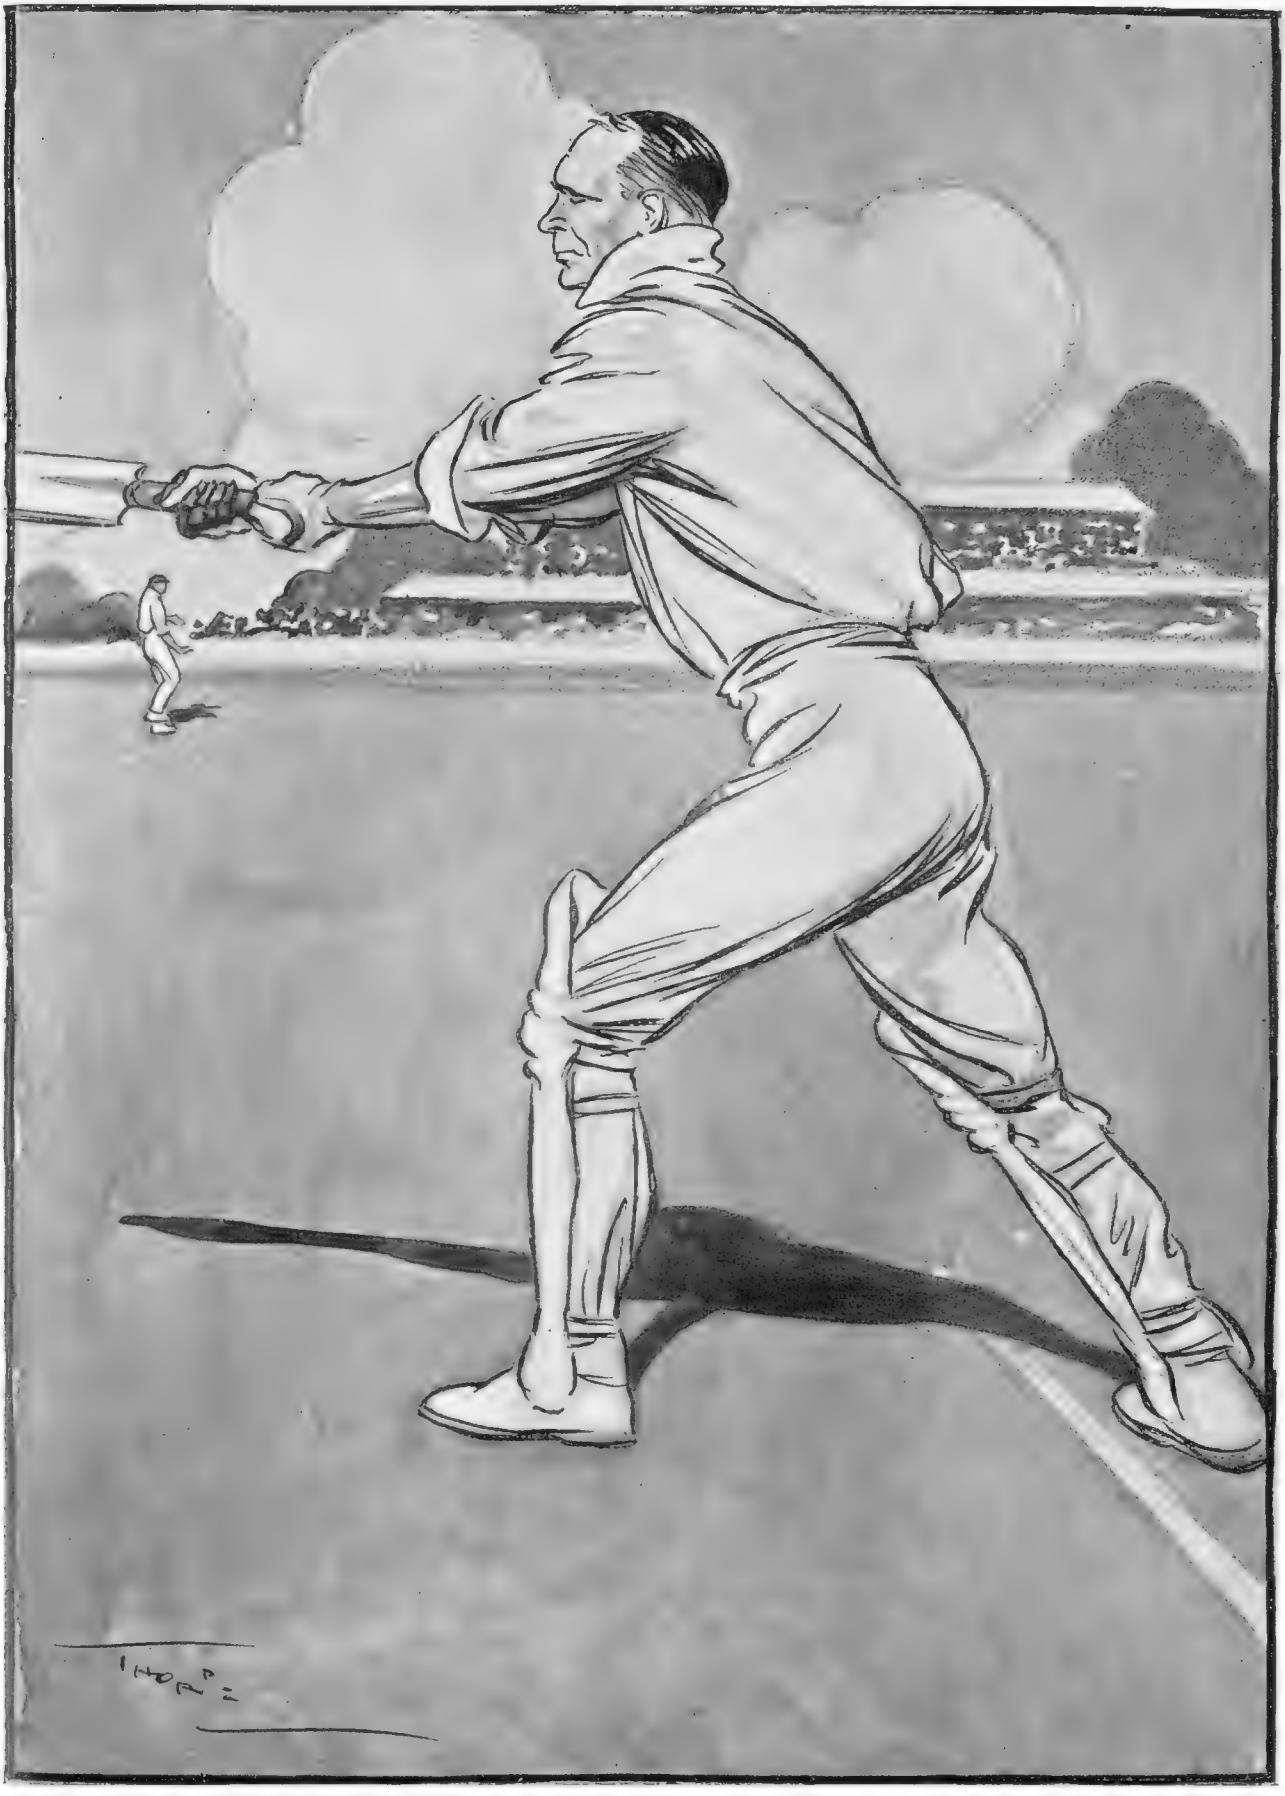
"This—is this yours, Yvonne?"

And Yvonne laughed and nodded.

Then Jimmu came and looked into the baby's face, at the black patch of hair, at his own mouth in miniature, at cornflower blue eyes. And he, too, laughed, and kissed his wife.

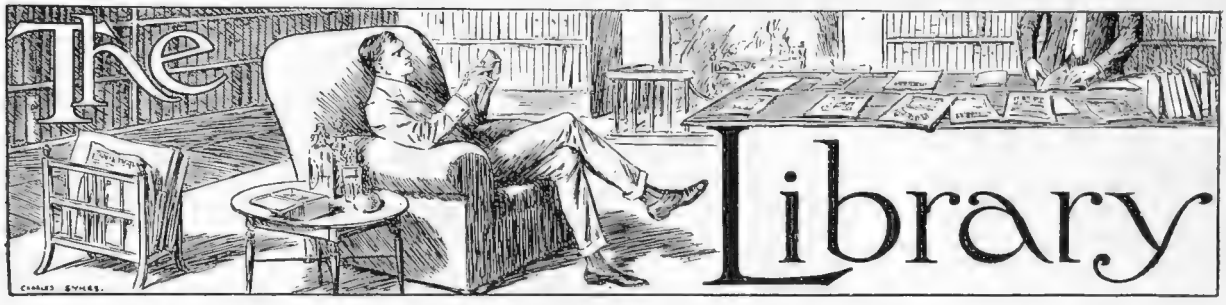
And the parents of Jimmu touched the warm morsel and praised its Eastern beauty and Western nose of intellect. And Mr. Allan kissed his daughter, and went hurriedly out of the room. And Yvonne kissed her beaming parents-in-law and her mother and Jimmu. And Jimmu kissed Yvonne—and Yvonne—and Yvonne—and the little Yuki-Chan—and eventually Mrs. Allan. And—— BASIL MACDONALD HASTINGS.

Famous Cricketers: No. 3—"The Parson"



THE REV. F. H. GILLINGHAM (ESSEX): A SKETCH BY THORPE

"Parson" Gillingham is one of the finest bats Essex cricket has produced, and his splendid sportsmanship and enthusiasm are always examples for his side. He is as fine a field as he is a bat, and sloggers with a knack of lifting the ball have to go exceedingly warily with Gillingham in the long field. He is, by the way, to be married next month



An Eerie Novel

If, when writing Nightshade (Constable: 6*s.*), Paul Gwynne desired to convey a sense of the unreal, and to cause his readers' flesh to creep pretty frequently, he has effected his purpose admirably. Dr. Meisterlimmer is the most evil individual imaginable, and when he offers to restore the sight of our hero, the blind musician, we instinctively feel, even had he not confessed as much, that he does so for his own ultimate gain. The author's characterisation of the two sisters, Francisca and Carmen, is distinctly clever. The one, a famous and beautiful singer, who has tasted life in all its forms, the other, also beautiful, but innocent and untarnished by the world. Both women, each in her own way, love the handsome blind man, and in the handling of these loves, so widely different, Mr. Gwynne has displayed special skill. The story is full of colour and fire, with, perhaps, a trifle too much eeriness for the average reader.

Amusing Satires

The Bolster Book, by Harry Graham (Mills and Boon: 6*s.*), is published for those unfortunates who suffer from insomnia. The author prescribes, for those in need of an opiate, one or two of his delicious little satires to be read in bed. I hardly think that this prescription will have the desired effect, and for this reason I consider Mr. Graham to be a bad physician. Of course, it may be his intention that the patient shall laugh himself to sleep. He doesn't say so in his preface—I believe he substitutes the verb "bore." Anyway, I think The Bolster Book is a safer prescription for melancholia or a fit of the "blues."

A Sark Story

John Oxenham's latest novel, A Maid of the Silver Sea (Hodder and Stoughton: 6*s.*), is a story of the romantic Isle of Sark. The plot is provided by two mysterious deaths that occur in a lonely spot on the cliffs. The first victim is our heroine, Nance's, bullying brother, who is known to have been on bad terms with Gard, the young English manager of the silver mine, and the two had quarrelled on the fatal night. As might be expected, the Sark people accuse Gard of murder, and decide to take the law into their own hands. But with the help of Nance, with whom he is in love, the young manager contrives to escape to a hiding-place. At the critical moment the second and similar death occurs, and as Gard is known to be in hiding a long distance off, it cannot be attributed to him. The Sark men acknowledge their mistake, while Gard is instrumental in discovering the "murderer." Mr. Oxenham writes with his usual charm, but one is left with the impression that he might have done rather better with the material at his disposal.

A Beautiful Book

I recently noticed The Wye, in Messrs. A. and C. Black's Beautiful Books Series, but have neglected to mention an earlier volume in the same series, entitled The Rivers and Streams of England (20*s.* net). The illustrations to this beautiful volume have been painted by Sutton Palmer, and the descriptive letterpress is by A. G. Bradley. Mr. Palmer has covered his ground well, and the seventy-five illustrations in colour are all that could be desired. Especially happy is the painting of that magnificent piece of scenery on the Derwent, viz., Abraham's Tor, Matlock, Derbyshire. The rivers and streams of England afford plenty of inspiration for the painter's brush, and Mr. Palmer has conveyed his impressions truthfully to the canvas. A very pretty study of browns and greens is the picture entitled "A Stream, Near Leith Hill, Surrey," and most successfully has the painter caught the wild turbulence of the river in "On the West Lynn, Lynmouth, Devon." Then, again, the wealth of colour in the paintings entitled "The Nidd, Knaresborough Castle, Yorkshire," and "A Glimpse of the Thames, Kew," the picturesque peacefulness of "The Wey, Surrey," the glories of the sunset in "The Swale, Richmond, Yorkshire," and the grandeur of the scenery in "The High Force, Tees, Yorkshire," are all admirably portrayed. The Rivers and Streams of England is certainly a volume to possess.

The Fascinations of Sicily

The modern traveller is disposed to seek out the unexplored regions of the earth, although there are many places nearer home which are of not less historical and picturesque importance, and about which as little is known. How much, for example, is known of Sicily? How many people know that it was once under British protection? Sicily, in its geographical and historical position, is the greatest island of the Mediterranean. Signora Caico, who is the author of Sicilian Ways and Days (John Long: 12*s.* 6*d.* net), has had the advantage of having lived for many years among the islanders—long enough, in fact, to be able to write about them with perfect knowledge and understanding. The author has written a flowing and lucid narrative, in which observation and sympathy and humour are apparent upon every page. Criticism is not absent, but it is kindly, appreciative, just, and good-tempered. The work is lavishly illustrated from scores of excellent photographs taken by the author, and these add greatly to the volume's interest. R. M.

An Evening's . . . Recreation with the PIANOLA PIANO

Good music never palls. The Pianola Piano (Steinway, Weber, or Steck Piano) is always a source of real enjoyment, because it means good music—music which you and your friends actually produce for yourselves. If you own a Pianola Piano you can entertain any number of people. Everyone is anxious to play the Pianola Piano as soon as they realise how simple it is to give an artistic rendering of any composition that may be selected. To many people it comes as the greatest of surprises to hear someone whom they had previously regarded as being completely incapable of giving any sort of musical performance playing an intricate composition in a way that could not be taken exception to. And they are even more surprised when they get to the Pianola Piano themselves and find how easy it is to play even the most difficult music.

THE AMATEUR GOLF CHAMPIONSHIP—III.

Mr. Hilton's Return to Form

It gave me particular pleasure to note the return to his old form of that truly great player, Mr. H. H. Hilton. His match with that famous veteran, Mr. Horace Hutchinson, was most interesting to watch, and was won by Mr. Hilton's superior steadiness, Mr. Hutchinson at critical points in the game duffing his short pitches. Mr. Hilton gave Mr. Graham a tremendous thrashing in the sixth heat, but failed to do himself justice in the semi-final against Mr. Aylmer. He seemed worried about his putting, and committed the fatal mistake of ringing the changes between his aluminium and iron putters. But his wonderful and accurate game of old days is rapidly coming back to him, and nothing would surprise me less or delight me more than to see him give an admirable account of himself in the Open Championship at St. Andrews. Mr. Harris added immensely to his reputation by the fight he put up against Mr. Ball in the sixth heat. He actually won the first three holes of the match, and but for Mr. Ball's phenomenal shots at the crisis of the last two holes, and Mr. Harris's final failure to hole a short putt at the nineteenth hole, the whole history of the tournament might have been changed. In the Flodden Field which overtook the Scottish division Mr. Harris was the only "flower of the forest" that survived to a late stage of the battle, and his countrymen owe him a debt of gratitude for keeping the Scottish standard flying so long.

New Midland Amateurs

The two new Midland lights, Messrs. F. A. Woolley and F. C. Carr, made an extremely favourable impression on the critics. Of the two I prefer Mr. Carr's style as the easier and more orthodox, but there is no gainsaying the power of Mr. Woolley's game. He has an ugly style with his wooden clubs, playing with a rather short, snatchy, and very quick half-swing, but he gets the ball a very long way with a low trajectory that gives not a great carry, but a very long run to his ball. He had a close match with Mr. Mitchell, which went to the eighteenth hole, and was in doubt till Mr. Woolley missed his second shot. Mr. Carr gave Mr. Hilton some anxious moments. The match ought to have finished at the sixteenth hole, or at latest at the seventeenth, but poor putting at both these holes on Mr. Hilton's part enabled Mr. Carr to survive till the eighteenth, and to have the satisfaction of being only beaten by the narrow margin of one hole by his great antagonist. We shall hear a great deal more of these two young Midland players, who come from that fruitful golfing district which has given us that fine old player, Mr. C. A. Palmer. Mr. Douglas Currie showed that the form he has displayed abroad during the winter is still with him, and his defeat of Captain Hutchison, a strong favourite for the event, was a sterling performance.

The Course Perfect

The course was in magnificent order, more grassy, and, therefore, easier in a sense than I have ever yet seen it. It was at full stretch, bar the tenth hole, where the old green was used, and families of new pot-bunkers here, there, and everywhere added considerably to the scientific aspect. It is almost needless to say that the management of the tournament was perfect. Mr. Janion, the secretary, is a past-master in these matters, and he did not belie his great reputation. It is always a peculiar pleasure to me to go to these meetings at Hoylake, where everything inside and outside the club-house is managed so admirably.

I have to thank the London and North Western Railway Company for their courtesy in allowing me to travel over their beautiful line in a privileged capacity. Hoylake players are very lucky in being served so magnificently by this noble line. The comic touch of the tournament was supplied by Mr. Darwin and Mr. Hutchinson in their match at the nineteenth hole. If anyone wishes a friendly reception let him ask either of these players for details of this painful episode, and he might add an innocent query to the latter as to the fate of his golf umbrella.

THE "RANELAGH"
A FIRST-CLASS BALL FOR 1/8
Or 20/- the Dozen.

Mr. Horace Hutchinson, writing of the "Ranelagh" Ball, says:—
"Golfers swear by many different balls, but they will probably agree on certain cardinal virtues that a ball must possess. First, it must fly well. Then it must keep its shape, since it is impossible to putt with a thing shaped like a Rugby football. Finally, and this is especially important in these days of the rubber boom, it must last well and withstand a good number of hard knocks. All these virtues the 'Ranelagh' seems to possess, and it is altogether a thoroughly good, reliable ball, and may safely be played with upon courses which are both longer and more difficult than that from which the ball takes its name."

"There is no better ball at ANY price."

Biennials for Next Year

Though biennials and perennials are sometimes sown in April, the seeds will germinate more rapidly now, and the plants will be quite large enough at the end of the season. The most suitable position is a bed which is slightly shaded during the middle of the day. It will then be easier to keep the soil moist without perpetual watering, which causes the surface layer to cake, and renders it difficult, if not impossible, for the seedlings to break through. At the same time, moisture is essential. Among the biennials that may be sown now are wallflowers, foxgloves, and Canterbury bells. Though the first two are really perennials, for they often live for several years, they are best treated as biennials—that is, grown one year to flower the next, and then thrown away. The seedlings must not be left in dense rows in the seed-bed, but should be pricked out as soon as they require more space. Wallflowers should be transplanted several times in order to prevent tap-roots and to induce fine fibrous roots. When so treated, they make hard, short-jointed growth, and are much less liable to be injured by frost in winter.

The Best Time to Sow Perennials

Among the perennials which are best sown at the present are those which flowered in spring and have just ripened their seeds. They include anemones, primroses, and polyanthus, and to these should be added as soon as possible auriculas. The advantage of acting at once may be tested in a very simple way—by sowing side by side some home-grown auricula seed and a bought packet, which, if bought now, will almost certainly be last year's. The former will come up thickly and rapidly; the latter will not germinate for months, and then very irregularly, some of it probably not until next spring. Anemone seed, if kept for a long time, may be most disappointing, much of it not germinating at all. In the case of anemones, the fluffy contents of the pods are not the seeds. The fluff is a mass of feathery appendages, the actual seed being merely a tiny speck at the end of each. To facilitate even distribution, the whole should be well rubbed in a handful of dry sand. The seeds will then be separated, and can be sown with the sand with which they are mixed. Many of the plants should flower next spring.

A new catalogue of poultry, kennel, and stable appliances, portable buildings, greenhouses, and so forth is issued by Messrs. Browne and Lilly, Ltd., of the Fobney Steam Joinery Works, Reading. Their quality is guaranteed by the reputation of the firm, yet their cheapness is remarkable. A one-light cucumber-frame—small, of course—is listed as low as a pound, and a span-roof frame for not much more than half as much again, both of them painted two coats and glazed with 21oz. glass. When a little lean-to greenhouse can be bought for three pounds, surely the humblest garden need not be without one. Plans of conservatories of elaborate design are also given in this useful catalogue, and the purchaser may feel sure that he is getting excellent value for his money.

The Menu: A LUNCHEON BASKET FOR A PICNIC OR A MOTOR EXCURSION

Sardine Sandwiches Egg and Anchovy Sandwiches
Mayonnaise of Lobster or Salmon
Galantine of Veal
Pigeon Pie Salad Cucumber
Jam Tarts Cake Fruit Salad
Cider Claret Soda-water Lemonade

Sardine Sandwiches

Cut slices of thin bread and butter. Put the following mixture on each slice: Bone and pass through a sieve twelve sardines, the yolks of two hard-boiled eggs, and a good-sized piece of butter. Add some finely chopped parsley, and season highly with black pepper and cayenne, all well mixed together. Cut the sandwiches into oblong shapes.

Egg and Anchovy Sandwiches

Use brown bread and butter, and add some essence of anchovy to the chopped whites and pounded yolks of hard-boiled eggs, and season with salt, pepper, and a flavour of cayenne. Fruit sandwiches are also delicious, and may be made with any kind of fruit, stewed and mixed with clotted cream.

Mayonnaise of Lobster

Cut a lobster into small pieces, and pour some tartare sauce over it, taking care to colour the latter with some pounded lobster spawn or coral; dish the lobster on a thick bed of shred lettuce, and garnish round with a border of hard-boiled eggs cut in quarters, olives, fillets of anchovies, and chopped aspic; ornament the top with a few sprigs of tarragon and chopped aspic. Cold cooked salmon can be treated in exactly the same way, if preferred to lobster.

Galantine of Veal

One pound of fillet of veal, ½lb. of lean ham, ½lb. of bread-crumbs, all put through the mincing-machine. Mix well together, adding two beaten eggs and flavouring to taste. Also add a little good stock. Tie in the form of a roly-poly in a cloth very tightly, and boil in stock for over two hours. Take out of stock, press into a nice shape, and glaze when cold. This is also very good made of rump-steak instead of veal.

Pigeon Pie

Cut 1lb. of rump steak in thin slices, season it, and put it at the bottom of a pie-dish. Cut four pigeons in halves, put a small piece of butter in each, lay them on the steak, season, sprinkle with flour, put in two hard-boiled eggs cut in slices, pour in half a pint of stock, cover with good crust, brush over with egg, and leave a hole in the top; scald the feet of the pigeons, skin them, put them in the hole, and bake in a moderate oven one hour and a half. Add more gravy when baked.

Fruit Salad

This is very nice made of bananas, oranges, pineapple, cherries, and strawberries. Stone and cut up the fruit, and let it all soak for an hour or so in a syrup, flavoured with a little brandy or liqueur. A small tin of pineapple, two oranges, two bananas, and ½lb. each of cherries and strawberries makes a good-sized dish, and cream served with it is a great improvement.

Henley Prospects: The Grand

It is a matter for regret that there will be no foreign competition for the Grand this year, for the English contingent, though small, will be undoubtedly strong, and the Belgians, had they been coming, would have had a tougher opposition to encounter even than they had last year. The Magdalen eight, head of the river at Oxford, is said to be one of the finest college crews ever seen out; some critics go so far as to say there has never been a finer one. The men average over 12st. 7lb. in weight, and, besides being heavy and powerful, are neat and quite equal to a bit of fast sprinting when called upon. I am glad to say that Leander does not propose to annex any of them, and accordingly, if all keep fit, the crew will be exactly the same as that which went head on the Isis last month. Leander, captained by A. G. Kirby, the old Oxford President, will also be strong. The eight will be made up, most probably, of R. C. Bourne (this year's Oxford stroke), Kirby, J. B. Rosher, J. S. Burn, N. Field, R. le Blanc Smith, R. H. Owen, and C. A. Gladstone. Thames and London will, of course, be represented, and Jesus, head of the river at Cambridge, are entering as well as Magdalen. Thames are getting to work in real earnest, and their eight is well above the average.

The Stewards'

For the Stewards' there are several foreign entries, and the international element thereby engendered will for once in a way give the race priority in public interest over the Grand. Besides the Winnipeg crew (F. F. Carruthers, C. E. Allen, G. B. Aldous, and C. S. Riley, stroke), to whom King George graciously sent a special message of welcome last week, there are two German fours, from the Mayence R.C. and the Berliner Ruder Club, both of which are reported to be fast, and England are lucky in having at least two really strong fours, Leander and Thames, wherewith to defend the Cup. The Thames four includes three of last year's winners, and consists of A. E. Snellgrove, K. Vernon, C. G. Rought, and B. Logan. They are certain to turn out very fast, as will also Leander, with R. B. Etherington-Smith, R.H. Barker, A.G. Kirby, and G. L. Thompson.

The Goblets and Diamonds

International rivalry will also add keenness to the racing in the Goblets and the Diamonds. The Dutchmen, Wielsma and Croon, who rowed 3 and stroke in their Olympic crew, have been racing together in a pair for a couple of seasons, and this means a lot, for pair-oared rowing calls for any amount of practice. The Berlin pair, Mathias and Dehn, are also likely to be fast, while of the English couples the

The Winnipeg Four at Practice

One of the foreign entries for the Stewards' Cup at Henley is that of the Winnipeg four (F. F. Carruthers, C. E. Allen, G. B. Aldous, and C. S. Riley), who have already arrived in England, and are making the Thames R.C. their headquarters during practice two Cantabs, Thompson and Burn, have been shaping well. For the Diamonds, J. L. Cosgrave, the Canadian, though only twenty-two years old and quite a light-weight, comes over with a big reputation. He has beaten some of the best men "out there." Rudolph Lucas, of the Mayence R.C., who was beaten in the final last year by A. A. Stuart, is going to have another shot, and is sure to do well. His fellow-countryman, Martin Stahnke, is a newcomer. Oxford will probably be represented by G. E. Hope and R. C. Bourne, as well as by A. McCulloch, the winner of two years ago, though McCulloch will row under Leander colours. He has been practising hard at Putney for some time, has got an excellent boat (by Phelps and Bowers) to row in, and altogether means business. The Cambridge contingent will consist of G. L. Thompson and possibly Fairbairn and Pinkus, and P. E. Dewar will almost certainly represent London.

A. C. Holland (Merton, Oxford)
The Oxford President won all his matches both in Singles and Doubles, partnered by V. Miley

N. G. Deed (President) and A. L. Prinsep. His victims were V. Miley—like himself a Soccer Blue—and R. R. Dudley, and he also gained a set from A. C. Holland, the Oxford President, who proved himself the best man on either side. Bache plays in a somewhat peculiar style, but it is undoubtedly effective, especially in defence, some of his "saves" being remarkably clever. The unfinished match was that between Deed and Dudley. They had reached 10-all when they stopped, but it seems rather a pity that they didn't finish it out. In the Doubles, Oxford's superiority was even more pronounced, as they only lost one match, their third pair, Dudley and A. K. Whallon, being beaten by A. L. Prinsep and A. R. Temperley, the Cambridge second pair. The Oxford first pair, Holland and Miley, who a little while back beat the All-England Champions, Gore and Roper Barrett, hardly did as well as was expected of them, though they won all their three matches. They had not as good a record at the end of the day as the two Rhodes scholars, W. R. Reynell and W. Cushing, who did not lose a set to any of their opponents.

The 'Varsity Match

As was more or less anticipated from the results of their trial matches, Oxford beat Cambridge quite easily in their annual encounter, which took place on the New College Ground, Oxford, on Wednesday and Thursday. The Singles went to Oxford by six matches to two, one being left unfinished. The two Cambridge wins were scored by H. G. Bache, the Soccer Blue, whose good play was quite the feature of the day, for though he has only gained his tennis Blue this year as third string, he did better than the two seniors,

RACING: Ascot and After. BY CARBINE

The Finish of the Gold Cup at Ascot : Mr. Fairie's Bayardo (Maher up) Winning

Black and Bayardo

Those were the two impressions of Ascot which will live vividly in memory. The first feature of the meeting was its intense sombreness, rendered all the more intense by the brilliant sunshine which favoured the gathering from start to end. The other impression was provided by Bayardo's magnificent performance in the Gold Cup. We only breed about one really great thoroughbred in every four or five years, and Bayardo is the best we have had since Pretty Polly. Even that unforgettable mare failed to set the seal on her reputation in the Ascot Gold Cup, but Bayardo made no mistake. It was not so much his victory which impressed us as the extraordinary ease with which he forged his way to the head of the field as soon as Maher gave him his head. It was one of the most electrifying things ever seen on a racecourse. For all the world it looked as though the other horses were slackening pace to suit the favourite, but, of course, it was his marvellous reserve force which carried him to the front.

A Great Horse

The race proved beyond all shadow of doubt that Bayardo is the best horse of his age, and his last season's defeats in the Derby and the Two Thousand appear to be more tragically unfortunate than ever. Mr. Fairie is a lucky man to own such a champion, and does he not deserve his success? For how many people would have had nerve enough to refuse an offer of £56,000 for a horse? One man who breathed more freely after Thursday's race was Alec Taylor. It is not generally known what an anxious time he has had with Bayardo's feet, which are inclined to be shelly. Indeed, a week before the Gold Cup it was by no means certain that the colt could be started. I wonder what Bayardo's career would have been had he been trained at a less suitable spot than Manton. The gallops here are simply incomparable. If you shut your eyes you would not be aware that horses were racing past within twenty yards of you. This is a fact, for it was put to the test only a fortnight ago, and it shows that a horse has great advantages when he is trained at Manton. All things considered, Bayardo's successes have been a great personal triumph for Taylor. Thank goodness, Mr. Fairie's crack was good enough to prevent such a revolting name as Sea Sick II. from appearing among the winners of our most cherished racing trophy. Mr. W. K. Vanderbilt must have a curious sense of humour to burden a good horse with so ugly a name. As a matter of fact, Sea Sick II. ought to have been third instead of second for the Gold Cup, as Randall eased Bachelor's Double in the last few strides. If there were any betting on next year's Gold Cup you would not get very long odds if you wanted to back the last-named colt to win it.

Northumberland Plate

In the north to-day the Northumberland Plate will attract a good field of stayers, and the best of them may be Bridge of Earn and Elizabetta. On their Ascot running they ought to finish in the order in which their names are written, but I fancy Elizabetta can improve on that form, and I shall expect her to win. The same trainer's hand in the Newbury Summer Cup is a strong one, but if we go for one of his horses and ignore the others we are likely to burn our fingers, just as we did in the Ascot Stakes. Still, one will take the risk by anticipating the success of Moscato in the Cup. On Thursday in the north the Seaton Delaval Plate may be won by Garraveen. The week's racing will wind up pleasantly at Sandown Park, where Greenback will have to give a lot of weight away in the Sandringham Foal Stakes, but I think he will be equal to the task. Meanwhile, the Grand Prix is to be run for at Paris on Sunday, and from all that I hear a record crowd of Britishers will go to see Lemberg and Charles O'Malley take on the French cracks. I perceive no reason to look for the failure of Lemberg.

"A Turf Topic."—We are hearing much of the horse just now; of the shortage in the Army where the four-footed warrior is still an essential, and of man's ingratitude to his worn-out friend. As long, however, as England breeds the racehorse there will be a section of the public who will uphold our equine traditions, and, moreover, treat the old and useless worker, let us say, in a sportsmanlike way. Those who patronise the horse in his sporting aspect will do well to consult Mr. D. M. Gant's new booklet. Mr. Gant is the well-known commission agent of 25, Conduit Street, W., and the pioneer of the "no limit" and "no commission" system. His admirably got-up booklet, "A Great Institution," gives, among other facts, a number of testimonials which go to prove that fair dealing, courtesy, and a clear, straightforward method of business have won for Mr. Gant his present successful position.

Coaching and the Car

Coaching "Marathons" and "Corinthians" during Horse Show week, an occasional meet of four-in-hands, a picnic team for the races—these and little else are left to us of a coaching age hailed still as glorious by those to whom four horses at a hand gallop stand for the very poetry of locomotion. And, indeed, in retrospect, coaching is picturesque enough, as in a pleasant day's experience it is grateful; but as the only means of road transport for any climatic conditions, it must have been painfully close to the heroic. We are, perhaps, not less hardy or imaginative than we were (although the fashion is to hail the past as if our forbears were giant gods), but we would not willingly cast back to methods of transport so rudimentary—however readily we allow the glory. We have a much more excellent way. Besides, the railways killed the coach, and came perilously near to killing the road. But they could never kill the glamour of the road. We are, in the bones of us, road travellers. In our visions of Elysium we approach by a road; in our nightmares only by a railway! The time is near when the road must enter again into its own and be peopled by travellers who know of it as the only possible line of communication. The car makes that return possible. It combines the swift-moving, mechanically propelled form of transport whose greater utility, when it came to us in the shape of a railway, broke down all the alleged glory of the coach—(I rather suspect our illustrious progenitors relinquished it without regret, for it is, even in its vastly improved present-day form, a lumbersome and inadequate vehicle, not easily controlled)—the car combines the quick movement and certain control of the locomotive with a mobility that only a road vehicle can possess. It opens to us our highways again. We are in our element.

A Coaching Adventure

The first car coach service starting from the Hotel Métropole, London. The "Adventure," a 60 h.-p. Napier, fitted with a Pullman saloon body, will run regularly between London and Brighton every Sunday

Sentiment v. Utility

The car has killed nothing of sentiment. In its early form certainly, it did not conduce to the inspiration of poesy—to put it gently! There was a certain odour, and there was an equally certain noise. The adventurous souls who pioneered, spent more time on their backs under the car than ever they spent on the driving seat, while their presence on the driving seat was not primâ facie evidence that the vehicle was moving! In its present form, however, the car is a splendid thing—clean, swift, silent, easeful, virile. The poet can find in it quite a number of songs, and has found since Henley's barbaric soul leaped into verse under the spur of speed. Artists in other media have limned it in most noble settings without incongruity. And every class in Society — aristocrat, plutocrat, democrat—has rejoiced in its utility. Until now, however, no attempt has been made to resuscitate the stage coach idea. Of course, every motor omnibus is, ipso facto, a stage coach—and a better and safer stage coach than ever horses hauled—which, incidentally, is the reason why the thirteen motor-'buses of London in 1904 have grown to 1,063 in 1910, and the motor-cabs have multiplied in the same period from exactly one to exactly 5,070—in London alone) — but although the journeys of the omnibus are extending every day, we have not yet realised the long stage transport of coaching days. With very good reason, certainly. First, the railway is still with us (and likely enough to remain), and is cheaper. It is also, owing to certain road conditions, swifter than a car can be—generally. That is the unanswerable argument. Those conditions will in considerable measure be removed sooner or later—sooner, probably, now that Mr. Rees Jeffreys has been appointed to the Road Board. All motorists must hope that the golden opportunity to fuse their forces offered by the appointment will be seized by the Automobile Association and the Motor Union. As it is, Demos on holiday would certainly take the motor-bus if it would convey him to Margate and back for four shillings. And so far as the wealthier class is concerned, why, its members each has a private motor stage-coach of his own. For these reasons principally a motor-coach service has so far failed to materialise.

"Absolutely Perfect"
A 15 h.-p. Straker-Squire, with 2-seater body. Mr. Edgar Ranger, owner (at the wheel), after covering 8,500 miles in six months, acclaims the car "absolutely perfect"

A Stage Car Service

At the same time, the idea has great possibilities. There is a vast army car-less for reasons of convenience, but wealthy enough gladly to avail themselves of a well-appointed car service running in the direction they want to go—or so it would seem. It has, however, been left to the enterprise of Mr. S. F. Edge to test the possibilities of such a service. Naturally he has fixed upon "London-by-the-Sea" as the present limit of the journey, and with commercial caution decided to make it a Sabbath service only—between the Hotel Métropole, London, and its namesake at Brighton. The coach is an opulent Pullman saloon mounted upon a six-cylinder Napier chassis of 60 h.-p., a very ample power for the purpose, while the even silence of the transmission from six cylinders will make a splendid introduction to the possibilities of up-to-date motoring. For the rest it is sufficient that the attempt has the cordial approval of Lord Lonsdale and other notables closely associated with coaching, that the run will diverge from the beaten track to take in some of that heartsome scenery of the direct road down, and that, if successful, other services will shortly be running to Oxford, Stratford, the New Forest, and so on. Excellent!

A Beautiful Country House should have a beautiful artificial light. All country houses, beautiful or otherwise, should have a light which is soft and steady, requiring practically no attention and entirely free from smell or dirt. "Imperial" Acetylene not only has these advantages, but it has been installed in hundreds of Mansions without in any way damaging the existing decorations (a very important consideration in many houses). "Imperial Light" can be controlled by a switch near the door, costs one-fourth as much as Electric Light, and is as cheap as oil.

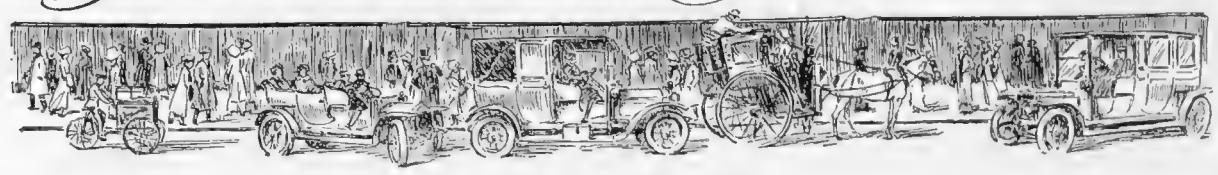
By H. M. BATEMAN

Fashion's Fancies.



By MRS. JACK MAY

WELL, we have turned to colours once again. But we have yet to see to what extent advantage will be taken of the revised decree as to the general mourning terminating on the 29th. Myself, I think it will be a matter settled largely by the pocket. That there is a peculiar attraction in the tender greys and mauves will be undoubtedly proved by the time these words appear in print. In the category, also, I think, we may safely throw the pretty black muslin spotted white, or vice versâ.

The "Ivernit" Sports Coat

Having broached the subject of the knitted golf coat recently in connection with the sportswoman's attire, viewed from a general standpoint, it seems particularly apropos to present to you the "Ivernit," concerning which there is a tale that I must tell and will make as succinct as possible.

Primarily, let me say, the "Ivernit" claims to be superior in shape—the modelling being done by tailors—and careful finish, the pockets being worked in with the body part, or, as it is described, inserted, a very superior plan to the old patch method, the buttons and button-holes displaying better workmanship, the collar manœuvred in quite a new manner to fit closer to the figure, and lastly, the superiority of the wool used, Paton's Alloa Yarns, than which there are no better.

Through the enterprise of one of our largest wholesale firms, who had hitherto dealt with the Continent—Switzerland chiefly—for these hand-knitted sports coats, it was discovered that, afforded the like opportunities, the peasants in certain districts in the North of Ireland could produce equally good work. It appears these particular Irish peasants are heaven-born knitters, tradition having it that the art of knitting was brought into the distressful country by the shipwrecked sailors of the Spanish Armada.

All this having been fully borne home to the firm in question, no time was lost in opening schools in certain districts, where the peasant was afforded free instruction in new stitches by skilled teachers, followed by a course under practical dressmakers, who expounded the reliable value of cut and style and the vast superiority of the hand-made article to its cheaper machine-made imitation. Well, in an incredibly short time the revived industry—for that is what it really amounts to—was an accomplished fact and a magnificent success, and a district over-run with poverty transformed into comparative prosperity. For the wages paid far surpass what has hitherto been regarded as affluence, and the work is all done in the homes.

The "Ivernit" Sports Coat

The charming Irish Knitted Coat here depicted is known as Model G, and is priced at 37*s.* 6*d.*

The objective aimed at was superiority to the rival Swiss goods throughout and lower prices, all of which has been achieved, together with a patriotic acknowledgment of the needs of workers who belong to the British Isles.

The "Ivernit" is obtainable in eight designs, and the newest colourings, the example depicted being known as Model G, measuring 36in. in length and priced at 37*s.* 6*d.* There are one or two banded coats, notably one with what is known as the polo collar. But the "Ivernit" has come to

ECZEMA AND EVERY SKIN ILLNESS SPEEDILY CURED

SKIN SUFFERERS SHOULD USE ANTEXEMA

YOU cannot look at the two illustrations without realising the extraordinary contrast. In the one picture you see the face of a skin sufferer who is disfigured, humiliated, and worried by skin illness, and in the other the same face is seen, clear, spotless, and unblemished. This wonderful transformation has been worked by Antexema, which will do as much for you as it has already done for thousands of others.

Nothing so detracts from the appearance as redness or roughness of the skin, pimples or blackheads on the face, or a bad complexion. Antexema is not offered to the public as a skin beautifier, though on this ground alone it ranks very high, and innumerable men and women whose skin was disfigured have now a clear skin owing to its use. Antexema does not plaster over or cover up skin blemishes, as so-called beautifiers do, but removes the disfigurement and, by rendering the skin healthy, restores the beautiful complexion with which Nature endowed you.

BEFORE USING ANTEXEMA

Never forget the important fact that your skin does not become seriously ill without warning. Before any severe skin complaint attacks you, there are always signs that something is wrong. Eczema and such troubles do not get you in their grip without first of all giving you notice of their approach. The point for you is to heed Nature's warning. Do that, and you will escape skin illness.

Go and look at your mirror and see whether your skin is healthy. If it looks red, rough, cracked, or chafed, or if you have a rash, eruption, or breaking-out upon it, this is clear proof it is unhealthy, and that you should apply Antexema immediately. You will thus obtain instant relief, and the progress of your skin affection will at once stop, and you will start on the road to perfect skin health. At the same time, you must take Antexema Granules to purify your blood, and make it an invaluable rule to use Antexema Soap for both bath and toilet, as it embodies the fragrance and healing, antiseptic virtues of the pine forest, and greatly assists your cure. In this way you stop any threatened skin complaint and avoid future discomfort and disfigurement.

Antexema is a Common-sense Remedy

Where is the sense of using a messy, and possibly injurious, ointment if you are suffering from eczema or some other skin illness? You say you hope it will do you good; but the question is, "Does it?" No! You find that it does you no good, and, as a matter of fact, your skin trouble seems worse than it was before you began using it. The reason is simple. You are not following common-sense lines and adopting Nature's method of cure. Any kind of ointment almost will make the bad place feel comfortable just while it is on—that is, supposing the numerous bandages which you have to use to prevent the greasy ointment spoiling your clothes allow you any comfort at all. The moment the ointment is removed the trouble is as bad as before.

What are the requirements of a common-sense cure? A common-sense remedy should at once dry over the affected part and form a convenient, invisible, air-proof covering which will keep out dust, grit, and germs, which do terrible mischief when they find entrance. A common-sense cure is one that will instantly stop the distressing irritation and burning pain, and enable a new and healthy skin to grow in place of an old unhealthy skin. That is precisely what Antexema does. That is exactly why it succeeds where everything else fails. Antexema is a cooling, soothing, healing, creamy liquid which, when gently applied to the sore, cracked, inflamed, or broken skin, dries at once, and thus becomes invisible. This is a very great advantage if the face, neck, or hands are affected, because it enables Antexema to be applied freely during the day without anyone being the wiser.

Thousands of Grateful Letters have been received from former sufferers who have been cured of blackheads, eczema—both dry, weeping, scaly, acute, and chronic—bad legs, ringworm, pimples, barber's rash, and every other variety of skin illness. No skin trouble can resist the healing influence of Antexema. It cures every skin complaint, from the slightest to the most serious and advanced. Antexema cures baby's skin ailments just as thoroughly as it cures those of adults who have been tormented by skin illness for years. The most painful and disfiguring skin affections arise from small beginnings. A little red spot, slight soreness, an inflamed pimple, intolerable itching, or something similar is always the first sign that your skin is unhealthy. Adopt Antexema treatment at this stage and you will nip the trouble in the bud. Neglect, however, will mean that the trouble will spread and become chronic, and you will consequently have to suffer much future discomfort.

AFTER USING ANTEXEMA

All chemists supply Antexema. There is no difficulty about getting a bottle. Every chemist, pharmacist, and store, including Boots', Lewis and Burrows', Army and Navy Stores, Civil Service Stores, and all cash chemists, supply Antexema in regular shilling bottles, or it can be had direct, post free, in plain wrapper, for 1*s.* 3*d.* from the Antexema Company, 83, Castle Road, London, N.W. Also obtainable everywhere in India, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, and every British Dominion.

"Antexema" CURES EVERY SKIN ILLNESS

make history, and although the promoters are no sentimentalists, but sound business men, it is pleasant to reflect that these Irish knitted coats are prepared to stand on the basis of clear merit and superiority.

Messrs. Shoolbred, Tottenham Court Road

One of the notable material successes of this season is voile. And in no direction is it doing more valiant service than in the realms of blouses. A fine quality has all the appearance of a mousseline, but washes far more satisfactorily than the latter. A white cotton voile it is, striped with black, that is requisitioned for the smart, albeit simple, little blouse sketched at Shoolbred's. The back of the blouse is practically a replica of the front, the neck finishing with a turn-over collar of flat-pleated white French muslin, edged with lace. Now, this is no mere ephemeral thing, only capable of lasting a few weeks, but a real stand-by summer possession, and consequently exceptionally cheap at 18*s.* 9*d.*

A Smart but Simple Blouse

(Sketched at Shoolbred's by Dorothy Millar)

And nowhere will there be found a more prolific array of reasonably priced lingerie slips than here. There is, in particular, a range at 13*s.* 9*d.* which includes some remarkable imitation Irish crochet lace fancies. A charming linon, not the very filmy quality, is embroidered round the base of the throat and down the left side in quasi-Russian fashion, two pleats running over the shoulder and giving a becoming breadth to the figure. And yet another novelty is a shapely "Magyar" of broderie anglaise of regular design, a falling collar of the same outlined with Valenciennes edging affording a picturesque finish. Tottenham House is assuredly a source of exceptional attraction to those who are seeking novelty and value in the guise of the classic blouse.

The House of Tecla

Tecla in Paris is well known. The building in the Rue de la Paix, with its front of statuary marble and bronze in the Louis XVI. style, and its interior in tones of light grey, is one of the most attractive showrooms in Paris. The replica of this well-known house at 30, Old Bond Street will enable visitors to inspect the famous pearls, which are fascinating in appearance and wonderful in construction.

Professor Tecla, by his scientific reconstruction of rubies, has for some years produced stones equal in natural qualities to those of the mines. It is no secret to state that they are formed from small particles of the real ruby, and by fusion are reconstructed into larger stones. The latest discovery is the Tecla Pearl, and presumably he has worked on similar natural lines, inasmuch as the result is a reproduction of the delicate tone, lustre, texture, and the durability of the natural pearl.

Set in conjunction with real diamonds they display the highest art of the trained craftsmen, who create original designs which are not repeated. Thus each piece of jewel-work is unique, and the grace and delicacy of execution stand unequalled by the most expert joailliers of the Rue de la Paix.

To visit the showrooms in Paris, or at 30, Old Bond Street, is to educate the cultured taste into the latest developments of the jeweller's art, and the inspection is made the more delightful by the courtesy of attendants, who do not attempt to persuade one to purchase any of the exhibits.

As a great scientific achievement it is of intense interest, and the defined artistry displayed in settings and mountings touches the newest note in one of the oldest arts in the world.

An Association Useful to Travellers

There is an ever-increasing number of people who wish to see something of the fascinating world that lies beyond their own particular sphere. Theirs is a restless Viking spirit, only at its best and happiest when roving from one place to another, doing and seeing the many things that are done and look so differently under strange climes. The objects of the International Guides Association, as its name implies, are to supply gentlemen to relieve travellers of all the labour and wearisome details that have until now been considered inseparable from their wanderings. The Association is in a position to furnish guides competent to act as couriers, private secretaries, clerks (correspondence and others), companions, etc. A wire to "Enots, London," a 'phone message to 3236 Victoria, or a letter to the head office at 20, Victoria Street, London, S.W., is all that need now be done to ensure that one shall wander at ease, and, indeed, in luxury, for the message will bring to you, whenever you may desire him, an international guide. Passages booked by all the leading steamship lines. Full particulars of booking department, International Guides Association, 20, Victoria Street, Westminster.

Fashionable Felixstowe

It is a mistaken idea to suppose that, in order to enjoy the greatest amount of sunshine, one must reside on the South Coast, for Felixstowe, the select and fashionable watering-place, facing due South on the East Coast, holds the foremost place in this respect, and the air is all that can be desired. As an ideal spot for convalescents, it is highly recommended by the medical profession on account of its dry and sunny climate. The "Felix" is without question the most beautiful English hotel, and with its lawns and charmingly arranged gardens sloping to the shore, offers superior accommodation. Moderate en pension terms can be arranged, and there is an excellent train service between Liverpool Street and Felixstowe. Every Friday a non-stop express leaves Liverpool Street at 4.10 p.m. Recent visitors to the "Felix" include Lord and Lady Lindley, Lady Chitty, Lady St. Helier, Lady Weston, Sir John and Lady Duncan, Sir Walter and Lady Foster, the Vicomtesse de la Chapelle, Lady O'Neill, Sir Algernon Osborn, and Sir Walter Bell.

"Spotting the Beauty"

"Spotting the Beauty" is the diversion of the day, and bridge and picture-puzzles are relegated to limbo, for someone with an ingenious mind has hit upon what is perhaps the most fascinating problem ever devised for a competition. "Spot the Beauty" is the name of the competition, game, diversion, or whatever you please to call it, and the Erasmic Company, Ltd., are offering £300 in cash prizes to successful "beauty spotters." Your chemist will be happy to supply you with the necessary competition forms and particulars. There are no entry fees; you can try your skill at "spotting the beauty" without expense, and with the pleasant knowledge that a cheque for £100 or £50 or so may quite possibly reward you. But apart from the possibility of prize winning, there is enough or native interest in "Spot the Beauty" to make it the most popular problem-pastime of the day. By all means get a form from your chemist, or write for one to the Erasmic Company, Ltd., Warrington.

Women and War

While national service still lags, women are taking up eagerly the idea of a sort of National Nursing Service, as is shown by the popularity of the Voluntary Aid Detachments. A still more practical development of this idea has sprung into being in the form of "The Women's Sick and Wounded Convoy Corps," which has its headquarters at 39, Great Smith Street, Westminster. From its members who have obtained the necessary certificates it organises Voluntary Aid Detachments in conformity with the requirements of the British Red Cross Society. Its whole training comprises lectures and demonstrations on anatomy, physiology, first aid, home and field nursing, sanitation, hygiene, and prevention of disease, drills and classes in ambulance work, signalling, laundry work and cooking, and practical demonstrations, in the field and elsewhere, of the various methods of improvising stretchers, splints, bandages, etc., adapting buildings for hospital purposes, and transforming country carts and railway trucks into vehicles suitable for the transportation of the sick and wounded. All women who desire to serve their country are earnestly invited to become members of the corps, which has for its watchword "Loyalty," not only to country and to humanity, but to womanhood.
